Target Field's Environment and Sustainability Tour

$7/student $10/adult

Reservations to heidi@growinggreenhearts.com required by Feb. 20th, 2016

It's not just the grass that's green! At Target Field, sustainability and environmental stewardship are important elements of building design and operations. Target Field achieved Silver certification from the U.S. Green Building Council's Leadership in Energy and Environment Design (LEED) program, and it is the highest-ranked LEED-certified major league ballpark. Target Field leads the way in transit, water use, and recycling. In the Environment and Sustainability tour, learn how LEED credits fit at Target Field and how the ballpark meets the many environmental challenges of a sports facility.

Busing may be available. Contact heidi@growinggreenhearts.com for more info.

Meet Our Tour Guide: Kristen M. Anderson Professor of Art History

KRISTIN ANDERSON teaches courses on the history of art and architecture in the Department of Art at Augsburg College. In 2005, she received the Distinguished Contributions to Teaching and Learning award for Excellence in Teaching.

Her courses include art history and architectural history surveys as well as more specialized offerings like American Art, Scandinavian Art, and Women and Art. She also teaches a popular course, The Designed Environment, about the architectural and urban history of the Twin Cities. The class meets at a different location for each session, bringing students face-to-face with the buildings and spaces they study.

Kristin's current writing and research is focused on sports architecture, and she is co-authoring a book on the history of sports facilities in the Twin Cities for the University of Minnesota Press. Other research interests include Scandinavian immigrant folk art and the altar paintings tradition of the Norwegian-Americans.

A popular speaker in church and community settings, Kristin also gives tours and presentations at Target Field, focusing on architecture, sustainability issues, women in baseball, and art at the ballpark.
